CHICAGO – CBS's "Blue Bloods" and "The Good Wife," both recently released on DVD (first season for the former, second season for the latter), were interesting stories in April of this year as ratings watchdogs expressed concerns that either or both could be canceled despite loyal fan bases. Both were given the reprieve because they have viewers who just won't give up on them. See why with this stellar pair of releases.

If I had to pick one of these two ratings-challenged shows it would be no contest — "The Good Wife" is one of the best dramas on TV. If we're talking purely network television, I'm not sure there's even a contest. What other shows could compete with an ensemble like this one with five Emmy nominees and the winner for Best Actress? Juliana Margulies is giving one of the most complex and engaging performances on television right now, cable or network. And the supporting cast is stellar, including Emmy nominees Josh Charles, Alan Cumming, Christine Baranski, and last year's winner Archie Panjabi. This incredible ensemble has taken some of the most complex, interesting writing on network TV and really elevated it even a step beyond what it is on paper.

What about "Blue Bloods"? It didn't impress me much on initial viewing but it has garnered an impressive, loyal following on Friday nights on CBS (and was one of the most called-about shows during my weekly WGN segments). It may not have big ratings but the reason that CBS renewed "Blue Bloods" is simple — those who do love it are loyal to it. It's the kind of modest hit that could be on for years. I get the feeling that people who do adore this family-based cop show will do so for a decade if CBS is willing to keep it on that long. Check out the first season for yourself and see if you could fall for "Blue Bloods" as well.

"Blue Bloods: Season One"

As an Assistant D.A., his daughter Erin (Bridget Moynahan) passionately defends the letter of the law while she struggles to raise her daughter as a newly single mother. His youngest, Jamie (Will Estes), just enlisted as a beat cop even though he earned a degree from Harvard Law.
