CHICAGO – They don't make too many Easter movies. There are tons of Christmas movies. Halloween has a genre. Even "Independence Day." But Easter is under-served. Based on "Hop," there's a reason for that. The film isn't as torturous as I was expecting, but it definitely misses its mark for all but the littlest ones. If you have a toddler looking for something new to watch this Easter, it might get the job done. Everyone else, wait for another holiday.

Blu-ray Rating: 2.5/5.0

James Marsden does his game best to keep up with a film in which he's one of the few human actors. While we're on the subject, I generally HATE movies with CGI creations and humans ("Alvin and the Chipmunks," "The Smurfs") and was, therefore, dreading "Hop." Marsden has enough fun that it didn't annoy me as much as I was expecting. Take that as faint praise.

Marsden stars as Fred the Easter Bunny. "Hop" is the story of how he got that title after meeting the rambunctious E.B.(voiced by Russell Brand) and learning that the myth of bunnies and chicks on Easter who bring candy and colored eggs to children is not really a myth, E.B. doesn't want to take over the family business from dear-old-dad (voiced by Hugh Laurie) but has to intervene when the nefarious chick Carlos (voiced by Hank Azaria) tries to take over. Fred is along for the ride (as are Kaley Cuoco, Gary Cole, and Elizabeth Perkins).

"Hop" is one of those modern kids movies that's far too reliant on pop culture jokes, stupid dance numbers, and bad physical humor. And it never looks like the CGI creations are actually in the same space as the human ones. These movies are going to age HORRIBLY. Having said that, there are a few decent laughs here and the cast seems to be having a good time. If you're in a jellybean-induced sugar daze, it might work.
