CHICAGO – That headline may seem like ridiculously faint praise. As a parent of two boys who love TV, trust me when I tell you that it’s not. There is some incredibly smart TV aimed at kids — “Adventure Time,” “Phineas & Ferb” — but a lot of it fails to pass the test that you won’t want to jump out a window when your rugrat wants to watch it on repeat. “Kung Fu Panda: Legends of Awesomeness,” not unlike another DreamWorks movie-turned-show in “The Penguins of Madagascar,” isn’t as ambitious or clever as the best children’s TV but it’s also far from the bottom of the barrel. It’s reasonably entertaining and if your kid liked “Kung Fu Panda” or “Kung Fu Panda 2,” this first DVD release of the show will more than satisfy.

Rating: 3.0/5.0

Why not a complete season set? Why not special features? This feels like a placeholder release, a sampler set designed to spur interest in the original broadcasts, which just started their third season on Nickelodeon. It’s common for kid’s shows for studios to put together a few episodes, keep costs low, and just get kids talking about the show that’s coming back for a new season. So parents and kids get seven episodes with modest SD transfers. They look fine, not great and not awful. Kids won’t notice much of a difference. And you won’t care when they play them over and over and over...
