

Film Review: Sarah Polley's 'Stories We Tell' Resonates For All Viewers

Submitted by BrianTT [1] on May 16, 2013 - 2:46pm

- Brian Tallerico [2]
- HollywoodChicago.com Content [3]
- Movie Review [4]
- Sarah Polley [5]
- Stories We Tell [6]

CHICAGO – Sarah Polley's "Stories We Tell" may seem deceptively simple or even boring in concept. At its core, it's a film about a talented filmmaker and actress investigating her family's past and her own lineage. Where Polley's work goes from mere family movie to something much greater is in how she uses her own quest for answers to illuminate why & how we tell stories in the first place, especially in the form of film. The ripple effect of memory, the way stories reveal personality, nature vs. nurture, and the idea that it not just action but how we share, the stories we tell, that impact future generations. This is the best film to be released in Chicago so far this year.

Rating: 5.0/5.0

From the beginning, Polley is playing with the form of the family biographical documentary. The subject is her mother, Diane. She passed away when Sarah was very young and it makes sense that Polley would want to speak with her father and siblings about the mother she never really knew. Who was Diane? Was she melancholy because she longed for a theatrical career she could never have? Was she happy with her family? What did we learn from her life and her having left so soon? "Stories We Tell" could have been merely a series of interviews, talking-head clips with people who knew Diane and Sarah and could help bridge the gap between the two created by time and death.

Read Brian Tallerico's full review of "Stories We Tell" in our reviews section. [7]

However, Polley starts subverting expectations right from the beginning. We see her father Michael not merely in interview but in a recording booth, reading the story of his love and life with Diane. Sarah sits at the sound board, sometimes even asking for alternate takes. One of Polley's brothers asks how he looks on film. We are being constantly reminded that this is a story within a story. It is Michael Polley's story, first and foremost, but it is also being crafted, edited, and directed by Sarah Polley. The concept of turning personal into public feels even deeper when one considers Polley's other films, "Away From Her" and "Take This Waltz," which simply cannot be watched with the same detachment from their filmmaker after seeing "Stories We Tell."

Continue reading for Brian Tallerico's full "Stories We Tell" review. [7]

"Stories We Tell" was directed by Sarah Polley. It is now playing in some markets and opens in Chicago on May 17, 2013.

Stories We Tell

Photo credit: Roadside Attractions

Source URL (retrieved on Apr 17 2024 - 2:16pm):

<http://www.hollywoodchicago.com/news/22131/film-review-sarah-polley-s-stories-we-tell-resonates-for-all-viewers>

Links:

- [1] <http://www.hollywoodchicago.com/users/briantt>
- [2] <http://www.hollywoodchicago.com/news/brian-tallerico>
- [3] <http://www.hollywoodchicago.com/news/hollywoodchicagodotcom-content>
- [4] <http://www.hollywoodchicago.com/news/movie-review>
- [5] <http://www.hollywoodchicago.com/news/sarah-polley>
- [6] <http://www.hollywoodchicago.com/news/stories-we-tell>
- [7] <http://www.hollywoodchicago.com/reviews/22130/sarah-polley-s-stories-we-tell-resonates-for-all-viewers>