The story is a oddball “bromance” between Sun (James Kyson), a stringy cage fighter who can’t bear to hurt an opponent, and Pete (Pancho Moler), a little person who likes to wear wings and dreams of flight. Their encounters comes at a crucial time in both their lives, as Sun is resisting the parenting of a son he fathered as a teen and Pete is painting a mural on the town’s water tower that communicates his dream. The intersection is of lives in flux, at the gentle point of departure that have them ready to soar. The filmed is produced by James Choi, who was just recognized in New City Magazine’s recent FILM 50, for his contributions to Chicago’s cinema community.

The Chicago premiere of “Banana Season” is Friday, October 5th at 8pm (with an encore on October 7th at 5pm), 2018, at the Gene Siskel Film Center, 164 North State in Chicago. For more information regarding the Gene Siskel Film Center, click here. [20]
